Wedding season is back in full force, and brides and guests alike are excited to celebrate — even when that comes with making tough decisions on what to wear. Once you have the dress, don't let picking the perfect bridal hair accessory be the last speed bump to getting you down the aisle (or for guests, the forgotten detail that you only remember after you see wedding photos). With wedding trends like botanical prints, pearl embellishments and more, there are endless possibilities when it comes to planning your look, so we consulted several experts to help guide your wedding hair accessorizing.

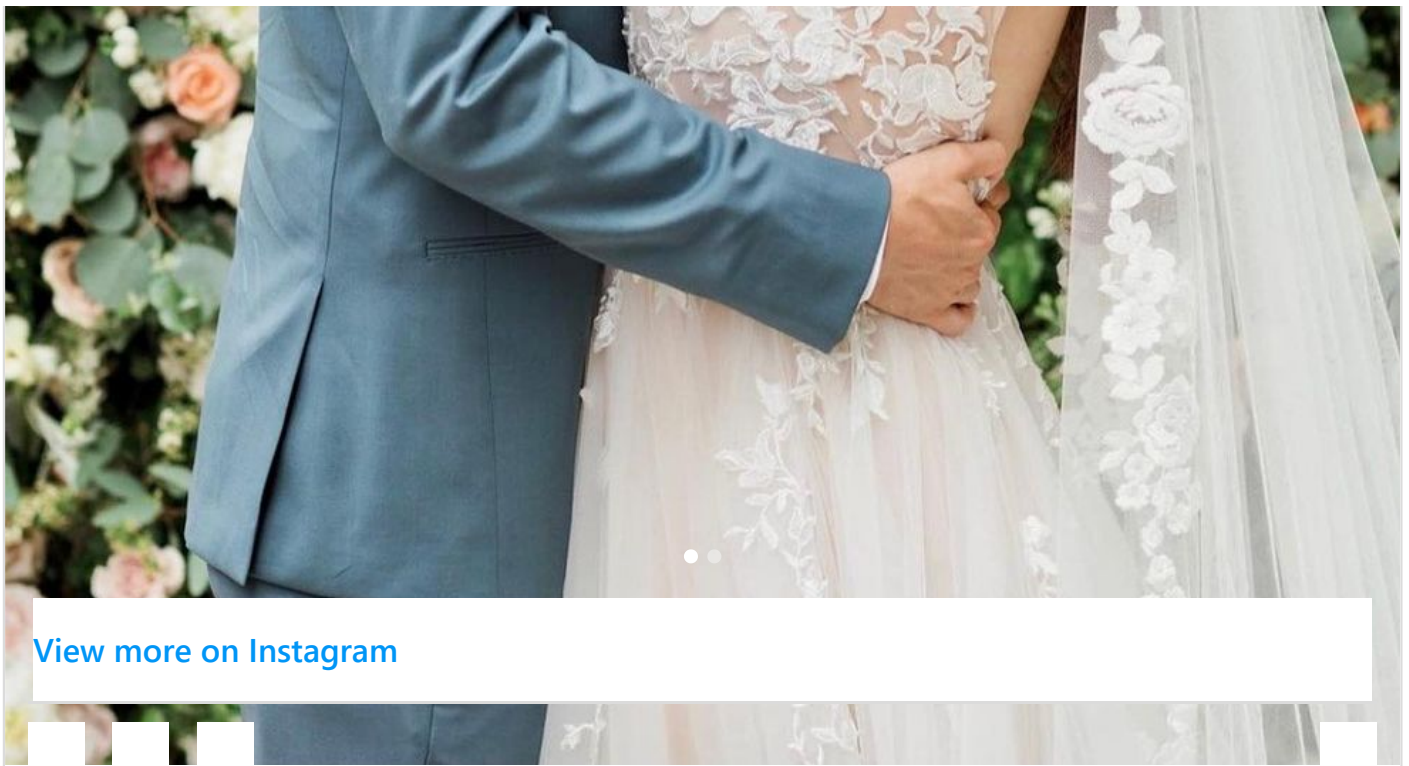

“Depending on the season and vibe of the wedding, it’s always nice to mirror the occasion and any details of the dress to your accessories,” says Jamie Burke, lead consultant at Designer Loft Bridal in New York City. This goes for brides and guests alike, and while it may seem tricky to get those finishing touches just right, bridal stylist Maisie-Kate Keane recommends “pulling inspiration from the fabric, color, texture or print of your outfit” and going from there to ensure that your accessories won’t clash.

As with styling any look, it's all about balance. "If your dress has a stunning and detailed train, I recommend a cleaner veil, so as to not take away from the train's beauty," Burke advises. "If it's a more clean train, you can really go dramatic with a detailed lacy or beaded veil." The same can be said for other bridal hair accessories like tiaras, headbands and barrettes — you don't want to take away from the dress. In fact, you can think about accessories as an extension of the gown. "For a wedding guest or bride, hair accessories can act as embellishments to your dress," Keane says.
